

A $5,750 treatment that only cost $200

Rosie* - Airedale Terrier

When Rosie's owners noticed her refusing to eat and throwing up, she was rushed to the vet.

An initial x-ray of Rosie's stomach was performed, but nothing appeared, so Rosie was sent home.

But when Rosie returned to the vet two days later with the same symptoms, her vet quickly realised more extensive x-rays were needed. When the second x-rays finally showed a foreign body lodged in Rosie's throat, her vet acted quickly.

Emergency surgery was performed, and a bottle cap was removed. She then spent three days recovering in ICU with antibiotics and pain killers. After improving quickly, Rosie was then released so her owners could continue her recovery at home.

At Vets Choice insurance for pets, we receive all sorts of claims every day. Most of them are caused by something as simple as one moment left alone, one wrong move or eating something they shouldn't. However, one decision they make shouldn't mean you have to swallow a hefty bill.

We want to see pets getting the care they deserve. If your pet has an incident, we want you to focus on their recovery, not the financial burden.

Choose sensible, so your pet doesn't have to be.

Be like Rosie's owners, and let Vets Choice insurance for pets help your pet get the care it deserves.
