

You may be surprised how easily a significant injury can occur

Teddy* - French Bulldog

When Teddy was brought into the clinic, it was obvious something was wrong.

First, the vet stress-checked his leg to see what he'd injured, before consulting with his owner to consent to an x-ray. The x-ray showed a fractured leg, which meant Teddy would need surgery. Knowing they had Vets Choice insurance for pets, they were glad that there'd be no concern about the cost of treatment.

After the operation, the vet prescribed medication to help ease the pain and reduce inflammation. With only $200 out of pocket for the claim, there was no financial pain either. Teddy was discharged to recover at home with his owners, and will be back on his feet in no time.

Choosing to have pet insurance means Teddy can get the best care.

Your vet does what they do because they love animals. However, a lot of the treatments vets provide are quite similar to the treatments your doctor may provide for you.

Vets use the same machines, similar medicines and practice similar treatments to doctors, but with no Medicare for pets, paying for animal care is very different.

That's where Vets Choice can help. When facing unexpected injuries, insuring your pet can help vets provide the care your pet deserves, with only minimal out of pocket expense.
